Crafting a Strong Application for Fully Funded Creative Writing PhDs

Securing a fully funded position is competitive, so your application must stand out. Here are some key components to focus on:

Develop a Compelling Writing Sample

Your creative portfolio is often the most critical element of your application. Whether it's a collection of poems, a novel excerpt, or a series of short stories, ensure your work is polished and representative of your voice. Tailor your sample to align with the program's strengths or faculty interests.

Write a Thoughtful Research Proposal

PhD programs require a clear plan for your creative and critical research. Outline your project's scope, objectives, and significance. Demonstrate how your work contributes to literary studies or pushes creative boundaries.

Secure Strong Letters of Recommendation

Choose referees who know your writing and academic abilities well. Their endorsements should highlight your potential as a researcher and creative writer.

Prepare for Interviews or Writing Workshops

Some programs may invite shortlisted candidates for interviews or workshop sessions. Use these to showcase your enthusiasm, professionalism, and willingness to engage with feedback.

Funding Challenges and Realities

While many programs offer fully funded PhDs in creative writing, the reality is that these spots are limited and highly competitive. Some applicants may only receive partial funding, requiring them to seek external scholarships or part-time work. It's essential to have a backup plan and explore multiple funding avenues.

Alternative Funding Sources to Consider

- National and Regional Arts Councils: Many countries have grants specifically for creative writing projects.
- Literary Foundations: Organizations dedicated to supporting writers may offer fellowships.
- University Grants: Beyond standard funding, some departments have small grants for research or travel.
- Crowdfunding or Sponsorship: Innovative writers sometimes raise funds through online platforms.

Combining university funding with external sources can make even partially funded programs financially viable.

Balancing Creativity and Academic Rigor

One unique aspect of a PhD in creative writing is the integration of creative practice with scholarly research. This dual focus can be thrilling but also demanding. Fully funded programs provide the time and resources to explore this balance without financial stress.

Many students find that the academic environment challenges them to think critically about their work, situating their creative projects within larger literary and cultural contexts. This intellectual engagement often deepens the quality and impact of their creative output.

Tips for Making the Most of Your PhD Journey

- Engage with Workshops and Seminars: Feedback from peers and faculty is invaluable.

- Publish Early and Often: Seek opportunities in literary journals and conferences.
- Network within the Literary Community: Attend readings, festivals, and academic conferences.
- Maintain a Writing Routine: Balance research deadlines with consistent creative practice.

Moreover, interdisciplinary approaches—melding creative writing with digital humanities, cultural studies, or environmental literature—are opening new funding avenues.

Prospective students who position their work within broader academic conversations may increase their chances of securing full funding.

The COVID-19 pandemic also influenced funding dynamics, with some institutions tightening budgets while others created emergency fellowships to support students through uncertain times. As universities continue to adapt, it is crucial for applicants to stay informed about evolving funding landscapes.

Fully funded PhD creative writing programs remain a vital pathway for writers intent on deepening their craft in an academically rigorous environment. Graduate Students at Work highlights the expertise and experiences of graduate students to demonstrate what graduate study entails, what it makes possible, and what it constrains in the context of corporatizing higher education. This collection of full-length research articles and short personal essays illustrates graduate students' experiences, organizing tactics, and strategies for staying in or moving out of the academy. Speaking from personal experience as well as reporting research findings, the contributors of Graduate Students at Work illustrate the significant expertise that graduate students are asked to enact in their time-intensive jobs as teachers, researchers, and administrators, even as they are kept in poverty wages for the decade or so it takes to move through a master's and doctoral program into the promised land of a tenure-track job. While these students are the leaders of the academic labor movement, they have yet to receive as much attention as adjunct instructors and other laborers in the university system. Though they experience harassment, discrimination, and exploitation, graduate students rarely have access to labor protections because they are often misclassified as students, not employees—a key rhetorical strategy universities use to fight graduate student organizing. These essays and articles also draw insightful connections between the labor conditions of graduate student workers and other workers navigating poverty wages, labor migration, limited benefits, and harassment and discrimination around lines of race, gender, ability, and citizenship—the most important connection perhaps being the possibility for organization and unionization to fight for better working conditions for all.

phd creative writing fully funded: Of Other Thoughts: Non-Traditional Ways to the Doctorate A.-Chr. Engels-Schwarzpaul, Michael A. Peters, 2013-11-19 Of Other Thoughts offers a path-breaking critique of the traditions underpinning doctoral research. Working against the grain of traditional research orthodoxies, graduate researchers (almost all from Indigenous, transnational, diasporic, coloured, queer and ethnic minorities) AND their supervisors offer insights into non-traditional and emergent modes of research—transcultural, post-colonial, trans-disciplinary and creative practice-led. Through case studies and contextualizing essays, Of Other Thoughts provides a unique guide to doctoral candidates and supervisors working with different modes of research. More radically, its questioning of traditional assumptions about the nature of the literature review, the genealogy of research practices, and the status and structuring of the thesis creates openings for alternative modes of researching. It gives our emerging researchers the courage to differ and challenges the University to take up its public role as critic and conscience of society. Barbara Bolt | Associate Professor and Associate Director of Research and Research Training | The Victorian College of the Arts | University of Melbourne | Australia These writings are essential reading for all PhD students interested in making their critical work count for more. They examine multiple sites where conservative politics and ethics, institutional regulations, culturally constrained supervisory practices, and disciplinary boundary maintenance run counter to the radical and transforming potential of critical PhD work. Graham Hingangaroa Smith | Distinguished Professor | Vice-Chancellor/Chief Executive Officer | Te Whare Wānanga o Awanuiārangi| Whakatāne | Aotearoa – New Zealand This book makes a distinctive and valuable contribution to the growing literature on doctoral education. Readers will find a wonderfully diverse collection of perspectives on non-traditional paths to the PhD. The book synthesises theory with practice in a highly effective and engaging manner. It sets doctoral experiences in their broader cultural, political and intellectual contexts, and addresses epistemological and methodological questions with fresh insight. Of Other Thoughts will appeal to students and supervisors in a range of different fields and deserves a wide international readership. Peter Roberts | Professor of Education, University of Canterbury | Christchurch | Aotearoa – New Zealand phd creative writing fully funded: The Ontology of Death Aaron Aquilina, 2023-05-18

Through examination of the death penalty in literature, Aaron Aquilina contests Heidegger's concept of 'being-towards-death' and proposes a new understanding of the political and philosophical subject. Dickens, Nabokov, Hugo, Sophocles and many others explore capital punishment in their works, from Antigone to Invitation to a Beheading. Using these varied case studies, Aquilina demonstrates how they all highlight two aspects of the experience. First, they uncover a particular state of being, or more precisely non-being, that comes with a death sentence, and, second, they reveal how this state exists beyond death row, as sovereignty and alterity are by no means confined to a prison cell. In contrast to Heidegger's being-towards-death, which individualizes the subject – only I can die my own death, supposedly – this book argues that, when condemned to death, the self and death collide, putting under erasure the category of subjectivity itself. Be it death row or not, when the supposed futurity of death is brought into the here and now, we encounter what Aquilina calls 'relational death'. Living on with death severs the subject's relation to itself, the other and political sociality as a whole, rendering the human less a named and recognizable 'being' than an anonymous 'living corpse', a human thing. In a sustained engagement with Blanchot, Levinas, Hegel, Agamben and Derrida, The Ontology of Death articulates a new theory of the subject, beyond political subjectivity defined by sovereignty and beyond the Heideggerian notion of ontological selfhood.

phd creative writing fully funded: The Place and the Writer Marshall Moore, Sam Meekings, 2021-04-08 The combined experience of authors throughout the ages offers a wealth of valuable information about the practice of creative writing. However, such lore can also be problematic for students and practitioners as it can be inherently additive, making it difficult to abandon processes that do not work. This adherence to lore also tends to be a US-centric endeavor. In order to take a nuanced approach to the uses and limitations of lore, The Place and the Writer offers a global perspective on creative writing pedagogy that has yet to be fully explored. Featuring a diverse array of cultural viewpoints from Brazil to Hong Kong, Finland to South Africa, this book explores the ongoing international debate about the best approaches for teaching and practicing creative writing. Marshall Moore and Sam Meekings challenge areas of perceived wisdom that persist in the field of creative writing, including aesthetics and politics in institutionalized creative writing; the process of workshopping; tuition and talent; anxiety in the classroom; unifying theory and lore; and teaching creative writing in languages other than English.

The collection considers creative writing learning and teaching as well as creative writing research. Contributors target debates that arise because of the nature of creative writing. These experts - from the UK, USA and Australia - specifically examine creative writing as a subject in universities and colleges and discuss both the creative knowledge and the critical understanding informing the subject and its future. Finally, this volume suggests ways in which addressing current issues will produce significant disciplinary knowledge that will contribute to the success of creative writing in current and future academic environments.

phd creative writing fully funded: Comparative Literature in Canada Susan Ingram, Irene Sywenky, 2019-11-05 This timely volume takes stock of the discipline of comparative literature and its theory and practice from a Canadian perspective. It engages with the most pressing critical issues at the intersection of comparative literature and other areas of inquiry in the context of scholarship, pedagogy and academic publishing: bilingualism and multilingualism, Indigeneity, multiple canons (literary and other), the relationship between print culture and other media, the development of information studies, concerted efforts in digitization, and the future of the production and dissemination of knowledge. The authors offer an analysis of the current state of Canadian comparative literature, with a dual focus on the issues of multilingualism in Canada's sociopolitical and cultural context and Canada's geographical location within the Americas. It also discusses ways in which contemporary technology is influencing the way that Canadian literature is taught, produced, and disseminated, and how this affects its readings.
