Long before written language or organized societies, early humans expressed themselves through visual symbols and creative acts. These primitive artworks were not just aesthetic; they served critical purposes in communication, spiritual rituals, and social cohesion. Understanding how art made the world begins with recognizing its roots in prehistoric times.

The First Brushstrokes: Cave Paintings and Petroglyphs

Some of the earliest known artworks date back over 40,000 years, found in caves across Europe, Africa, and Asia.
